Why is it important to attend PTO meetings?

"In study after study, researchers have shown that students who have more involved parents are simply more likely to get high marks on standardized tests. They're also more likely to volunteer in class, get good grades on class tests and quizzes, and make more friends. In fact, these same studies showed that more involvement by parents equated to higher achievement by their students. Students with involved parents tend to have fewer behavior problems, higher homework completion rates, and less of a reputation for disrupting the learning process."
